We should prefer Villa in some vast wilderness and with no opportunity to do further harm.

Americans are about as popular in Mexico as they are in a few countries of Europe, only the people of the latter have a different way of showing it.

An idle factory in Bellows Falls is to be filled with a concern from Massachusetts. Good! Let's have some more of similar recreation in other Vermont communities.

After listening to the address of Professor Alfred I. Smith of the Tuck school of administration and finance, Dartmouth college, the members of the Barre Board of Trade must realize that there is abundant opportunity for work by their organization, work which can only be accomplished through strong co-operative effort.

The East Montpelier agricultural region maintains its supremacy by presenting the champion butter maker of Vermont at the annual convention of the Vermont Dairymen's association. Like all the rest of central Vermont (Washington county, by the map), East Montpelier furnishes splendid opportunities for the real farmer.

The rather young and unfried state organization known as the Vermont Conference of Charities and Corrections, could scarcely find a better man as head of the institution than William J. Van Patten, a man who gives whole-souled, earnest work to movements which are calculated to improve the conditions of the state. He gives it, too, without expectation of reward other than that which comes from a sense of satisfaction over good work accomplished.

The British claim to have driven off a Zeppelin attack on London during December because they have perfected an elaborate system of defense against the warships attacking from the skies. There is every reason to believe the story because the British Isles have been remarkably free from attack in this way ever since early fall, whereas prior to that time the visitations were a common occurrence, with very serious attendant results. So more than ever Great Britain is a tight little domain because the British have also devised a successful means of defense against the attack of submarines and the fleet keeps the large German warships at a safe distance. The German dream of a devastated England is proving an idle chimera.

Now that the state of Vermont has acquired 2,000 acres of land on the east side of Mount Mansfield, in addition to 3,000 acres on the west side, recently acquired, and inasmuch as the summit of the mountain belongs to the University of Vermont through gift dating back to 1859 and is, therefore, semi-public property, it should be possible to devise some means whereby the roads and paths to the summit may be free to motorists, teams and pedestrians. If there is any one thing which will have a tendency to discourage the summer tourist business it is to exact toll of those who desire to get to the summit of the mountain, a condition which we understand was imposed during the season of 1915. Vermont's great vantage points of scenery should be free, if possible, especially the highest peak in the entire Green Mountain range.

TIME TO CHANGE METHODS.

The fact that a single fatality did not constitute the entire casualties of a student "rush" at the University of Pennsylvania last Wednesday but that six other students were injured in the same clash between classes indicates that the death was not a mere chance occurrence in a well-directed physical conflict but that there must have been real brutality in a contest which has gone beyond all reason as a test of physical supremacy in a civilized college community. Had the death of the student been the sum total of the casualties the event probably would have been made light of because of the belief that the bodily condition of the young student might have conducted to his disease during the stress of the encounter; but such a slur over of the affair is not possible when it is learned that six other students were unable to arise after the 700 fighting students had been disentangled. The conviction grows that the class "rush" as carried on at the University of Pennsylvania is in great need of change to some method of contest less brutal and less deadly.

THE SITUATION AT SALONIKI.

The landing of the Anglo-French forces, which evacuated Gallipoli, at Saloniki may mean that the Teutonic powers have adopted the entente allies' policy of delay and procrastination so long that their prospective attack on that stronghold will be a most formidable undertaking. The reports of the troops assembled in Saloniki before the arrival of these reinforcements had it that the defending army numbered several hundred thousand men. The Gallipoli troops will undoubtedly swell that number by 100,000, so that the entente allies really have a strong force. Backed up as they are by the big guns of the allied fleet, they will make a very stubborn defense and most probably will thwart any attempt at dislodgement by such a force as the Teutonic powers are able to send to that region, for the demands on the latter's resources on the west front, on the Italian border, in Bukovina and on the Russian west front are such as to make them slow to release troops there and send to far distant points. For the first time in the Balkan operations the entente allies now have what seems to be an adequate army for coping with the Teutonic powers; and the results of the impending clash will most certainly not be the easy steam-roller movement for the invaders as has been the case ever since Serbia was first entered by them.

HERE AND THERE AND THIS AND THAT

Bellows Falls drives out unscrupulous solicitors for charity simply by demanding that the solicitors go to a competent local authority and prove the trustworthiness and reliability of their purpose. Knowledge of the dollars that are banked out of Barre every year by solicitors coming from nobody knows where and vanishing just as mysteriously as they came, after making their collections, leads to a firm conviction that Barre ought to follow the Bellows Falls scheme of open and above-board soliciting. The money fraudulently collected every year would finance a local board of trade in securing some really reliable and valuable benefits for the city. Barre has been an "easy mark" for these pilferers too long.

Going from Heaven to—Montreal.

"Chauncey Smith, who has worked in the Express and Standard office for two months, has closed his labors there and enlisted in the Canadian volunteer service."—Newport item.

Our mingled condolences and congratulations to "Elpie" Thayer and staff of the Morrisville Messenger. Here is how they got hit by adversity and prosperity alike this week:

"The grip and big clearance sale ads. has 'raised Cain' with the paper this week, but we will make it up next week with a 16-page paper—if no more have the grip."

Go to the Doctor.

"Austria Claims to Be in the Dark. Unable to Find Out How Steamer Persia Was Sunk."—Newspaper headline.

Austria ought to go to some good oculist and find out what is the trouble with its vision.

Burbank's Latest Effort.

"They now call it the Fordless peace party."—Montpelier Argus.

Something like a seedless lemon, would you say, neighbor?

This Is What We Call Conservation.

A Barre man is "thanking his lucky stars." He went home from the office the other day, washed his hands, dried them on a towel and, as he did the latter act, noticed his ring caught in the fabric. Casually glancing to find the cause of the hitch, he found the empty prongs protruding where a diamond was accustomed to be seated. Not a little perturbed, the Barre man began looking about the room, into the washbowl, on the shelf, on the floor, in short, anywhere the little glitterer might have landed. Not finding it, he dispatched a young member of the family, post haste, to the office to search the floor and possible hiding places for the diamond. Search vain; no diamond in the office. Then the man bethought himself of the drain from the washbowl, and he went down cellar, lifted the trap and there the missing gem was located. Rather fortunate, what?

He finished worked Saturday for the Montpelier & Wells River road, where he has been employed for several years, and it was not known exactly what his position would be worth with the change in overseers.

A START FOR HOSPITAL.

Is Made by Proposal of C. F. Smith and Wife to Morrisville.

Morrisville, Jan. 14.—Mr. and Mrs. Chauncey F. Smith have offered their splendid home, Dorchester, to the local club for a hospital, on terms which they state as follows:

"We will name three business men in Morrisville, who are acceptable to your club, or a committee from it, said men to have no special interest in or friendship for us, even excluding any person connected with the M. L. society. Said men to appraise the property at what they consider a fair cash value. We will sell at their appraisal."

"If your club is sufficiently interested in this to canvass the town to secure the necessary means to buy the place and create an endowment fund for the hospital we will give $1,000 toward such funds. Were we able we would like to give the property for a public hospital. With many in this and adjoining towns much better able to give large sums, together with hosts of people who will be glad to give smaller sums, a good endowment fund ought to be raised."
